In the heart of dense and populated cities, the green spaces provide mental and physical relief to the residents. These green spaces promotes community interaction, sports activities, picnic, open air concerts enriching the urban experience and promote overall well-being. However, preservation of these green spaces is the real challenge along with increasing urbanization. Efforts for sustainable urban planning, maintaining parks and tree-lined avenues is necessary for both human and environment health. Balancing and maintaining harmonious cohabitation between human and environment is a shared responsibility of all.
