Peace and tranquility are the profound factors for a successful economy. ~~Undoubtedly~~ Undoubtedly, there are various examples in modern time and also in history which show the fact that countries with peace and stability have achieved a sound economic progress. In contemporary time, United States of America, United Kingdom and China are the apparent examples. Similarly in past, the fast advent of British colonization, the splendid map of USSR and the journey of americans from British submission to the super power of twenty-first century are also the glaring historical milestones which portray the positive relation between peace and a promising economy. On the contrary, countries with instability have always been in struggle to stabilize the country with peace to achieve ^{or build} a strong economy. Palestine, Afghanistan, and African countries such as Nigeria and Ethiopia, are the glaring examples with lack of peace and tranquility. Moreover, it becomes a day-dream for such countries to have a sound economy. To be precise, the bond between peace and a strong economy is conditioned on their positive or negative growth which is indivisible.
