3. Conclusion.

"Millions of wedding rings were found from the dead soldiers of World War II. These rings tell the stories of 'unhappy' ending love stories". Besides the statical discourse of war that 6.2 million people were died or 3% of the world's people population was brought to death, it rarely discussed the lives of the survivors. The survivors who had lost their loved ones in the war, who spent nights under the open skies along with the fear of death. Such wars are still being going on and yet the unseen consequences are rarely discussed. The war dimensions are extended beyond the conventional war that were fought on the borders. The war now-a-days effects every single person even if it is not confronted directly. It effects psychologically, biologically, financially, socially and geographically strategically. In the wake of technology, which have apparently made life easiers, on the other hand, it has created a new domain of warfare. This can have implication on every user of it i.e. it can be a child. Even the perceptions can be altered through technology. Terrorism and cyber war are one of the examples in this regard. Besides that, traditional wars also have effected lives in a distinct manner. Thus, the consequences of war are not confined to geography, but it has far-reaching implications on the lives and people.

Different types of war have different consequences of the lives of people respectively. For instances, in conventional war, people loss their loved ones, people get displaced which create migration crisis. Similarly, the long fought proxy war strains the ^{socio-}~~ecology~~ fabric of that effected region. Whereas, terrorism eats away the lives of innocent who have nothing in conflict with terrorists. Recently, trade war and cyber war have effected people's lives ~~di~~ in a ~~dis~~ distinct manner. This essay will further discuss the consequences that ~~are~~ ~~to~~ usually remained unnoticed.

Conventional war, that is fought on borders between the militants also have consequences that are unnoticed. In World-War II, 6.2 million people have died. The families of 6.2 million people kept waiting for them to return from the war. Similarly, around 25,000 soldiers have been died in Ukraine fighting in during the Russian invasion. Besides that, people residing in the border areas has to move to other cities in order to save their lives. The war force the people to get displaced from the homes that they have built with all their life's savings and efforts. After 2021, Russia-Ukraine-Russia war, over 10,000 people has been displaced. Similarly, during the World-War II, Warsaw city of Germany became a plain of debris where once people lived happily. Thus, during war times, regions to cities get destroyed, people loss their lives so do their loved ones and their belongings.

Proxy war, where there is no direct confrontation between the countries. But two groups backed by any support confront in all domains. Since the confrontation is not limited to the borders or between the soldiers, it affects all spheres of life in the respected manner. For instance, in countries like Syria and Yemen. These countries have a long-standing ~~is~~ of proxy-war faces numerous consequences besides loss of life and displacement. According to World Health Organization, people in Yemen and Syria are facing health issues due to prolong famine and poor sanitization. The disease like cholera is common in these countries.

In the same manner, Hamas-Israel prolong war in Gaza has led to many consequences that is not commonly brought to attention. For instance, new born children are dying due to malnutrition. Such health crisis is not discussed thoroughly. ¶ In the light of famine and health issues, it is rarely discussed about the people who have been facing any illnesses. There must be people with cancer, diabetes, hypertension, or any mental health issue. People surviving in such wars also require some medical assistance, that they cannot access timely due to war and had to go through the pain and discomfort.
