(a) Introduction:

Without a strong system of taxation no country can maintain its independence or build its economy. According to Qasid - e - Azam, Muhammed Ali Jinnah, Taxation is the backbone of any state's economic development and governance structure. It ensures a steady flow of revenue to finance public goods. However, the tax culture is facing problem such as lack of public trust between tax payers and tax-men education, particularly within institutions like the FBR's FATE wing, have significantly hindered progress. Furthermore, loopholes in tax laws, with widespread practice of tax evasion and avoidance, exacerbate the problem. Addressing these challenges requires a multi-pronged approach.

enhancing transparency. Simplifying the tax structure and leveraging data analytics to detect undeclared incomes. Pakistan faces serious challenges in developing a strong tax culture due to lack of public trust, weak tax enforcement, poor education about taxes, and loopholes in tax laws. Which should be solve through transparency of taxation.

Conclusion:

Pakistan faces serious challenges in developing a strong tax culture due to lack of public trust, weak tax enforcement, poor education about taxes, and loopholes in tax laws. Furthermore, the culture of tax avoidance is deeply rooted in maladministration, lack of accountability and poor example set by the ruling elite, who often evade taxes themselves. To overcome these challenges it is essential to promote the idea of taxation as a civic and national duty through widespread education and awareness campaigns.

Furthermore, institutions like the Federal Board of Revenue ^{should} ~~must~~ be made independent - to reduce political interference and ensure fair enforcement of tax laws... Only through transparent governance, responsible leadership, and a committed citizenry can state build a strong and sustainable tax culture that supports national development.
