To find our own flaws, it is important that what our enemy say about us. Our friend often praise us in a way that pleases our heart. Firstly, our flaws do not seem ^{seem} detection to them, or they hold us in such affection that, out of concern not to upset us, they hide them or overlook them. On the contrary, our ^{enemies} ~~enemy~~ scrutinize us closely, searching every corner to uncover our faults, and even small matters are exaggerated by them out of malice.

Albeit, it is a little bit reality. Friend always aggravates righteous out of hi friend and enemy looks fault. Therefore, we have to ^{be} more thankful to our ^{enemy} ~~enemy~~ as he examines our flaws. To look out in this scenario, ^{enemy} ~~enemy~~ is proved to be better than friend.
