

Both Parents Should Assume Equal Responsibility in Raising a Child.

Outline

1. Introduction.

a. Hook

b. Background.

c. Thesis statement "Both parents should assume equal responsibility in raising a child for his balanced development. However, this approach is faced with numerous challenges in traditional households, that can be coped with in by right strategies."

2. Why both parents should assume equal responsibility

a. It is necessary for child's balanced development of the child's personality.

(i) Mothers provide emotional validity and understanding (traditionally) leading to the development of emotional intelligence.

(ii) Traditionally, fathers are known for raising children with practical insights and real-life knowledge.

b. Equal responsibility prevents any one of the parents from being overburdened.

(i) Stereotypically gendered parenting roles

(ii) Work-Household dynamics and their impact on how they shape parenting roles.

3. Difficulties in achieving this standard of parenting?

- a. Patriarchal household structures.
- (i) Fathers restrict themselves merely to finances.
- (ii) Mothers bearing all the child-raising responsibilities.
- b. Inconvenient family structures.
- (i) Impact of joint families on child's parenting.
- (ii) Impact of joint families.
- (iii) c. Lack of communication.
 - (i) Sometimes, it is not about equal responsibility, rather equitable responsibility.
- d. Lack of understanding of child's psychology.
- (i) Parents may escape their respo parenting responsibilities altogether.
- (ii) Misunderstanding provision of material things and as fulfilling child's every need.
- (iii) The rise of nanny culture. well organized and quite

4. How the approach can be implemented at a large scale?

- a. Awareness campaigns.
- (i) Utilizing social media, and other media platforms.
- (ii) Seminars and conferences.

5. Conclusion.

Introduction:

Right parenting is essential and its significance cannot be denied. It not only contributes to raising ~~the~~ a citizen of a society, but also in determining the kind of leadership that society will have, and hence in shaping the futures of societies and civilizations. The approach to ensuring right parenting is ~~equal~~ the assumption of equal responsibility among both the parents. The parents who get equally involved in raising their child are ought to raise a secure, self-sufficient, tolerant, and wise man. Whereas, if a child is raised majorly by only one ~~individual~~ parent, he may feel neglected by the other — making him insecure, seeker of attention, demoralized, and less confident. Such individuals contribute ~~rarely~~ to the society. They may even spend their whole life indulging in their insecurities, questioning their worth. ~~So~~ Such outcomes necessitate that both parents should assume equal responsibility in raising a child for the balanced development of his personality. While this approach may be ~~expressed~~ may be numerous challenges in traditional households, — they may be addressed through right strategies.

try to write with clear statement please