The Essay.

In "Arab Spring" Social Media platforms like twitter, facebook, YouTube were used to organize protest, plan demonstrations, and coordinate action, bypassing traditional state controlled media. Activists shared pictures, videos and narratives that humanized the struggles against political oppression. The Arab Spring spread "with great speed" across the region. As people in one country were inspired by the events in another country, to join the protests against authoritarianism. This is the power of social media. Now a days, media has become an important pillar of our social, economic and political life; people are participating in world affairs and the standard of living is increasing in people's life. The rise of accountability through social media is also an unmissed prospect.

Despite these prospects, there are also a few problems which are spreading due to uncontrolled power of social media. The health crisis causing due to social media cannot be set aside. Fake news and disinformation has become a new normal. Moreover today social media is a threat to the world as it is now being used as a tool for hybrid war. The dawn of twenty first century has seen an unprecedented increase in the power of social media. It has both prospects and problems depending upon how responsibly its power is tamed.
