

Public administration is a newly emerged discipline compared to other disciplines of social sciences. Why is it necessary to study public administration as a separate discipline. What is the relationship of public administration with other social sciences such as political science, economics and law.

I. Introduction:

Public administration is the implementation of public law.

(W. Wilson)

Public administration is a newly emerged discipline in the late nineteenth century as compared to other social sciences. It emerged as a result of lack of implementation mechanism in the newly emerged nation-states. Defined as the detailed and systemic application of public law. There are various reasons that reinforce the study of public administration as a separate discipline. Core reasons are to protect its theoretic frameworks, equally and holistically implement its policies and to open doors for further research. On the other public administration shares its relations with political science by providing the implementing apparatus, economics by granting governance structure and law by giving legal framework.

II. Historical Background of Emergence of Public Administration:

Following events highlight the emergence of public administration.

III - Reasons of studying Public Administration as a separate Discipline:

Following are the reasons of studying public administration as a separate discipline.

(A). To Protect Theoretical Framework:

Public administration is studying as a independent discipline because to protect its theoretical framework.

Theories should not be blended with other disciplines.

For instance:

Politics and Administration
Dichotomy by W. Wilson.

ii. To implement Policies Holistically:

Public administration is the implementation of policies. When it will be a separate discipline, then policies will be implemented in true letter and spirit.

Autonomous Public Administration is the pre-requisite of holistically implementing policies.

Waber.

iii - To open Doors for Future Research:

Autonomic debate on the public administration opens the doors of future research. Independent discipline provides a thought provoking ideas to explore further.

For instance:

→ Max Weber Bureaucracy

↓

→ Scientific Management
by F.W. Taylor

↓

→ Human Relations Approach
by Schwann.

IV. Relations of Public Administration with Pol-Science:

Public administration gives practical frameworks of political science theories. With the emergence of city-states and their types, the vacancy filled by the administration.

Rousseau's concept of ideal states and city

states and the General will be practised by public administration.

V. Relation of Post-Soviet Public Administration with Economics:

Budgeting item of public administration provides base for the economics. Auditing and allocating budget are also the core pillars of economics provided by public administration.

→ Zero-Budgeting

↓

→ Line-Item Budgeting

↓

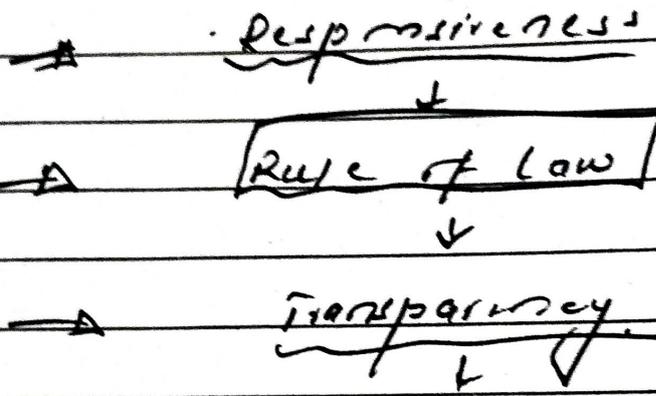

→ Performance Budgeting.

VI. Relation of Public Admin ministration with Law:

Concept of good governance in public administration has rule of law as its pillar. There should be equality before the law and it holds sovereign authority.

Pillars of Good Governance:

VII. Conclusion:

In a nutshell, public administration is the implementation of public law and emerged as independent discipline in late 19th century. It is a separate discipline because of maintaining holisticsity and to open doors for further research further, it shares relations with political science, economics and law in providing implementing apparatus and concept of good governance.