

To sum up, there is no such thing as coincidence in this world. Although, at surface level, the co-occurrence of two or more events might seem as accidental, upon deeper analysis, it would become evident that the causality of such incidence is long established. From dreams, opportunities, success, maturity to fall of civilizations, wars, and revolutions, nothing is accidental, sudden, or beyond causality. Even the birth of great leaders in the societies that required them the most is not coincidental, but it is society itself that shaped greatness out of otherwise ordinary people. The gendered division of labor in almost every culture is not coincidental, but an evolutionary economic subjugation of women, that all societies evolved through. Lastly, the globalization in today's world has made causality evident more than before between two seemingly distant events as interconnectedness has fostered a global culture. Thus, all these diverse human experiences, indicate towards the fact that there is no such thing as coincidence in this world.
