

The Bonding of a teacher and a student

The modern educational theorists are of the view that there are two perspectives of a teacher. The one is giving attention and time to a child, while, the other perspective is not to interfere with a child. However, if a teacher creates an environment of strict control and discipline, then there are likelihood chances that psychological disorders can occur in youngsters. For instance, if a teacher creates an environment of calm and peace in which a child feels safe. Then, a bond and relation is created between a teacher and a child. In this bonding, a child not only learns but also become a better individual for the country.

Approximate words in passage = 342 words

Approximate words in precis = 109 words

