Title: Dealing with the children.

The author says that modern educationists focus more on not interacting with the children rather than enjoying their company. If teachers genuinely like the kids and treat them like their pets, they will surely respect them. Children do not appreciate attention based on personal or political interests rather than genuine affection. However, overburdened teachers can't give proper time to every child, they should not spend more than two hours with the kids. Because the young youth causes teacher's burnout when leniency is showed. The author concludes that love and affection is the best means to control ^{the} children rather than mere strictness.

Title: Problems due to energetic people

All the bad things in the world happen because of the people being overproductive. The confusion and chaos in the world is not because of idleness but activeness. There are a lot of energies in the world but they are not being directed properly. In the past, if the emperors, kings, statesmen and generals had just stayed inactive then we would be living far better lives today. Furthermore, if the European political and the religious sects ~~just~~ just do nothing and instead take a break and take care of their mental healths then it will be a huge favour for us.

Title: Human life in temperate ~~and~~ and equator region

In the temperate regions of Northern Europe, the extreme cold has negative impact on people's energy and makes life difficult. In moderate cold, people have to work a lot harder to fulfill the basic necessities. Comparatively, in tropical regions, life is much easier because one does not have to wear layers of clothes or make fires, extract coal from ^{the} underground and eat a lot of food to survive, they require less of the basic needs, and live life with ease. Human's behaviour is the same in various seasons of the year; in summers we are calm and relaxed but in the winters we have to put extra effort to survive.

It is difficult to understand the roots of nations because they are built through various factors, thus making national identity more stricter which alternatively oppose the humanism concept of Socrates and Plato. Al-Ghazali emphasized to keep balance between nationalism and equility for all citizens. Bhaba has also added that everyone should keep humanity first over personal interests however, increase in nationalism has done the opposite; bloodshed in Palestine and Bosnian massacre are the examples. Topal made everyone aware that democracy is just a mask beneath it lies imperialism which can exploit the soul.

Johann Herder highlighted that nationalism can either unite or divide the people, depends on how it is used. A balanced form of nationalism is required; one that maintains national identity while protecting morals and fundamental human rights.

Titles Manto's style of writing

Manto was discouraged for his writings because everyone thought it lacked morals and was promoting vulgarity. but that didn't affect him, he kept sharing the realities of life especially ^{about} the people who were looked down in society. He believed no one's too good or too bad, it is combination of both. His characters live like humans. He was well aware about the fake and the real world and man's flaws. He wrote about bold topics but never became vulgar. Everyone could feel their struggles through his work and like other writers, his passion made him quite successful in his field.

Titles Importance of green spaces in cities

The parks in the cities provide peace and comfort from busy life. They are a home to various animals, keep air fresh, protect from heat and benefit our physical health. Many events can be arranged there which plays a key role in increasing individual interaction. Although it is a bit hard but very crucial that modern urban planning should not only give benefit to humans but the environment as well for a sustainable future.
