5) Conclusion

Foreign direct investment (FDI) is a cornerstone for any country. It brings economic stability, which leads to sovereignty and prosperity. Countries like China and United States enjoy maximum amount of FDI across the globe. However, almost two decades have been passed on, Pakistan still lags behind smooth foreign direct investment. Country faces chronic challenges in the wake of bringing FDI. These include political unrest, economic volatility and inefficient infrastructure. Pakistan also faces security issues for which investors are reluctant. Growing cost of doing business and crisis of brain drain in the country further discourage foreign investment. With obstacles comes opportunities and Pakistan possesses bunch of lucrative opportunities to bring FDI in the country. These include abundance of natural resources, strategic location and labour.

There is also an opportunity ~~in~~ agriculture ^{sector} (potentially) in the country. A thaw in Pakistan-US relations and diversifying foreign policy ambitions brings opportunities in FDI at doorsteps. Factually,

Multipolarity: Promoting Peace or Fueling War

Outline

1) Introduction

Multipolarity promotes peace because of ^{providing} political, economic, military and ^{other} means of preventing war. However, some might disagree with this notion which is not much convincing.

2) Multipolarity Promotes Peace:

Supporting Arguments:

2.1) Hegemonic expansion is contested due to balance of power

2.2) Strengthening multilateral diplomacy impeding the chances of war.

2.3) Economic interdependence promotes peace across the world.

2.4) Multipolar financial systems reduce trade monopoly, resultant trade confrontations become less likely.

2.5) Multipolar deterrence capability also hedges the notion of war.

2.6) Security alliances are more defensive rather than expansionist.

2.7) Regional blocks manage crisis better than fragmented institutions.

2.8) Peace is promoted in the wake of technological integration.

2.9) Multipolar world strengthens

well organized climate change response and governance

2.10) Institutional monopoly is diluted in multipolar arena.

3) Multipolarity Fuels War: An opposing yet unconvincing stance:

3.1) Multipolarity may fuel accidental war due to miscalculation;

However, deterrence and second strike capability erodes the chances of war.

3.2) Multipolarity leads to arms race; nevertheless, chances of war are few when balance of power prevails

3.3) Multipolarity leads to strategic hegemony; but nuclear capabilities halt the escalation

4) Conclusion

Since cold war era, many analyst believed that the United States' (US) hegemony over the USSR would translate into long lasting peace. The notion of peace dismantled as the US started military campaign across the globe. However, in contemporary era, with China, Russia and India becoming ~~strategic centers~~ has questioned the unipolarity of the US. Today's multipolar world order has ~~restricted~~ hegemonies for their expansion. Multipolarity in this way promotes peace across the globe. Balance of power erodes the likelihood of full scale conflict. Multilateral diplomacy is strengthened. Peace is promoted due to economic interdependence. Financial systems in multipolar world also ~~impedes~~ ~~trade~~ ~~monopoly~~. Multipolar world further aims at peace making and peace keeping because of technological integration, climate crisis and institutional autonomy. Some believe that multipolar world may lead to miscalculations and accidental wars. This notion becomes weak ^{because of} preventing deterrence and second strike capability.

By virtue of the fact, multipolarity promotes peace because of * (preventing) existing political, economic, military and other means of preventing war. Some may disagree with this but ~~their~~ stance is weak and unconvincing.
