Essay

"No nation can rise to the height of glory, if its women are not side by side to men," said Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah while emphasizing the significance of inclusion of women in politics, health, education and all sectors of a society. According to the United Nations, women empowerment is the provision of all social, economic and political rights to women in society, which are mentioned in the Human Right Charter of the United Nations. Many orthodox cultures and social dogmas consider women empowerment as a rebellion because they believe that women are inferior to men; and they must stay at home, and should only engage in house activities such as giving birth to babies, nourishing them and doing house chores. However, proponents of women empowerment believe that it leads to restoration of balance, as women empowerment ensures equality in terms of provision of basic human rights; it fosters gender equality by eradicating social dogmas; it restores peace and stability by preventing women-centric social movements; it ensures a healthy society through health centric policies; it prevents gender-based violence; and it results in economic growth by inclusion of women in economic sector. Through women centric legislation, education and social-awareness programmes women can be empowered, and it would ultimately ensure restore balance.

This discourse would shed light on the role of women empowerment in restoration of balance and ways forward for ~~empowering~~ ~~women.~~

To start with, empowering women is being considered as a rebellion by certain orthodox societies and even by some religions. For instance, in Jewish and Christian societies women are being taken as an object to please men; they are considered responsible for all sins. Thus, they are not granted ~~equal~~ equal rights as social beings in some orthodox Jewish and Christian societies. Similarly, in primitive areas of developing countries such as Pakistan, inclusion of women in education, economic, health and political sector is ~~against~~ against their cultural norms of these areas because ~~according to their perception women's~~ ~~place~~ ~~position~~ is at home, and they should ~~stay at home. Resultantly, these areas remain marginalised; their out-of-school children rate is high as compared to other areas where women are empowered; and they face social issues such as high crime rate, gender-based violence, poor health and high mortality rate and poor economic growth. Whereas, areas with educated, financially empowered and emotionally strong women such as Islamabad shows high standard of living. Therefore women empowerment cannot be a rebellion.~~

The previous discourse has explained the myths regarding women empowerment, the next discourse would explain the role of women empowerment in restoration of balance.

To begin with, women empowerment results in equality in terms of provision of human rights.

The charter of United Nations of human rights calls for equality of humans and provisions of human rights.

right to education, health, property, freedom, religion, freedom of speech and ~~the~~ inclusion in politics. Therefore, when ~~women of~~ women of a country are empowered, it definitely ensures the provision of human rights promised in the United Nations charter, and ensures a peaceful global society.

Further, women empowerment eliminates gender-related dogmas and fosters gender equality. Social perception associated with inclusion of women in certain jobs such as engineering and army prevents women to apply for such jobs. Moreover, women usually do not opt ^{educational} fields dominated by men such as computer-engineering and information technology, which creates gender inequality. However, an empowered female would chase such fields and it would ensure gender-equality. Hence, women empowerment eliminates social dogmas and promotes gender equality.

Moreover, when women in a society are empowered, it ensures the equal provision of social rights, as a result it results in restoration of social peace. Contrastingly, when women are ~~not~~ not granted rights, it results in women right movements which create social chaos. In Pakistan, patriarchal norms marginalised women, and ~~exorbitant~~ women right movements emerged such as Aurat March and #MeToo movements, which disrupted social peace and stability. Such movements halted daily life activities and also caused supply chain disruptions, which fueled inflation and ultimately, created social instability. Therefore, women empowerment maintains social balance, and prevents social demonstrations.

Additionally, when women in a society are empowered it ultimately leads to a healthy and society. In Iran, through women centric population control measures, Iranian government reduced births per woman from 6 to 2 children. It reduced unwanted pregnancies and mortality rate of women and children. In contrast to this, the World Health Organisation has reported nearly 48 million unwanted pregnancies, which increased a burden on health sector and poor delivery of health services which leads to high mortality rate and low life expectancy in Pakistan. Therefore, women empowerment is mandatory in ensuring a healthy society.

In addition to this, when women are granted inheritance rights it creates a social balance by preventing family disputes and making women financially independent. In Pakistan, despite provisions of inheritance rights in Muslim Family Law Ordinance, women in Balochistan are subjected to give up on their rights under their cultural norms such as Haq Bakshuana, which rendered s women to financially dependent on men, and it paves the way for disputes and conflicts. Therefore, empowering women through granting them inheritance rights ensure social and economic stability.

Furthermore, the integration of women in economic sector results in restoration of economic stability.

In Bangladesh, the government empowered women through inclusion of women in textile sector; it resultantly, increased textile exports, which strengthened the economy of Bangladesh. However, in Pakistan International Labour Organisation in 2023 reported that ^{just} nearly 20-22% of women are in job sector, and despite having nearly 48-49% of women out of total population, they are not integrated in economic sector.

This resulted in poor economic growth in Pakistan. So, inclusion of women in jobs ensures economic growth and prosperity.

To add to this, integration of women in politics results in formulation of women-centric policies and laws which prevents gender-based violence and restores social balance. In KPK, during the 2024 general elections of Pakistan, this area showed zero percent voter turnout, which results in demonstrating the reason for marginalisation of this area. In KPK, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, nearly 47% of girls are out of school according to a report by United Nations Children's Emergency Fund. Hence, women's inclusion in politics ensures provision of education and prevents gender-based violence in marginalised areas.

Moreover, digital empowerment of women results in provision of equal digital rights, and it increases economic well-being of women. When women are granted digital skills, it reduces economic burden on men, and results in enhancing living standards. In Pakistan, Digital Right Foundation reported gender disparity in terms of digital inclusion of men and women. Only 52% women have access to digital media which further fuels poverty due to overburdening women on men. Thus, digital inclusion of women reduces financial stresses and ensures equality of digital rights.

Lastly, women empowerment also strengthens judicial system of a country. When women speaks against sexual abuse and rape, it encourages reporting of such cases which remain unreported due to social dogmas associated with sexual abuse cases. Mukhtara Mai, a rape victim in a village of Pakistan, spoke against rape; it resulted in an increase in reporting of rape crimes. Moreover, her voice reached to international media, and her culprits were punished through law. Thus, women empowerment ensures dispensation of justice.

The previous discussion emphasized the role of women empowerment in restoration of balance. The next discussion would focus on ways forward for women empowerment.

Firstly, women centric legislation can play a significant role in formulation of policies for inclusion of women in education, health and job sector which ultimately result in empowerment of women. It is possible only through a strong political will and integration of women in politics. Thus, women centric legislation can be a major game changer for empowering women.

Further, education and awareness in marginalised areas can have a greater influence to eliminate social myths and dogmas related to gender. ~~It would empower women~~ ~~and ^{would} ~~strong~~ result in social~~ ~~and economic well-being of the~~ ~~whole society.~~ Therefore, education and so social awareness programs are necessary for empowering women of marginalised areas.

To cap it all,
women empowerment can play
a significant role in restoration of balance by ensuring gender equality; restoration of social peace
by preventing women right movements; restoration of democratic norms by inclusion of women in politics; ~~reducing~~ ^{increasing} economic burden of women on men through digital ~~inclusion and digital skills~~ ^{well done it is good effort} dispensation of justice and ~~increased conviction~~ ~~rate~~ ^{against} of crimes against women; and provision of equal rights to women according to the Charter of the United Nations. Thus, women empowerment is not a rebellion and it is the restoration of social, economic and political balance; and women centric legislations and social awareness programmes can play a significant role in empowering women.
