

Ans 1:- The difference between human beings' fear of death and children's fear of darkness is that, a (child's) child's fear arises from listening about stories of ghosts and thieves. Whereas, a human beings' fear of death arises from listening about a painful death experience.

Ans 2:- When a human being considers death as a punishment for him, for all those sins that he had committed in the world. And that death will take him to another world reflects a religious and sacred view of death.

Ans 3:- The painful experiences described by the monks in their books included, where the monks went through a ritual of physically hurting themselves. As an act of self-purification.

Ans 4:- The Roman Philosopher Seneca, is of the view that, death itself does not create fear in human beings. Rather the circumstances when a person is dying and the (sad) ceremonies held after the person's death.

QNO:51- The fact that a dying person's body turns pale and starts greening. Where his family and friends are seen crying and wearing mourning dresses on his death. Along with performing certain rituals, makes death horrible than it would be.