Title: Lieven's perspective regarding
Sectarianism in Pakistan

The author Anatol Lieven in his book Pakistan a hard country highlights that the country's discipline could be destabilised by strong moral decadence and psychological pressure by the citizens. He further emphasises that some groups of Pakistan are difficult to handle because of <sup>ethnic</sup> resistance. Pakistan army face resistance from citizens. In this regard, he focuses <sup>on</sup> the US interference in Pakistan. <sup>which</sup> has done <sup>severe</sup> damage to <sup>Pakistan's</sup> military.

The bigger issue of discipline in Pakistan is to tackle the identity differences and sectarian differences. Author also highlights this issue by providing a evidence of conversation with a <sup>person with</sup> punjabi ethnic identity. Therefore, author highlights that disintegration and lack of harmony is result of ethnic divisions in Pakistan.

Q No. 7: (TRANSLATION):

In today's fast moving times everyone is busy in fixing their own matters. No one is concerned for others. No one has true love and loyalty in their heart. Morality is declined. We are not selfish with people but with country as well. Have we ever thought that the place where once love resides is now replaced the environment of terrorism. But still there is nothing wrong. If we truly love Pakistan and introspect our individual faults then we can eradicate lot of mistakes. We all are future of tomorrow. We should eradicate the sectarian differences, poor and rich, cheap and elite differences. We should unite together to brighten this country's future. Pray that every citizen of this country unite together and stand to concerns for this country. Because alive is Pakistan so alive are we.
