

Arfan Ali

Topic: Agricultural decline in Pakistan and how to counter it.

Introduction:

As the proverbial stag who used to be happy to see his crown like antlers, and was grieved to see ugly legs. While being chased by some hounds his ugly legs helped him and he was out of the reach of the hounds. But his antlers got him stuck in a thorny bush and left him vulnerable to the hounds. Similarly, Pakistan is not utilizing its true strength, agriculture, which has the potential to transform a developing country to a developed one. Lack of water management system due to limited institutional funding is a hindrance to utilize this potential. Additionally, climate change and unfair water distribution has resulted in the loss of agricultural land leading to food shortage. There is high inflation rate in Pakistan, and rapid urbanization is further threatening the country. However, these threats can be countered by reforms in irrigation. The productivity can be increased by establishing research institutes for the capacity building of farmers. Technological reforms, provision of subsidies and transportation facilities, can help to counter the effects of agricultural decline. Agriculture sector in Pakistan is facing numerous challenges today, appropriate measures are needed to counter the situation.

Agriculture is the backbone of Pakistan's economy. Constructive efforts can fulfil the agricultural demands in Pakistan.

Crunch paragraph

Agriculture in Pakistan is currently in a state of decline and there is an urgent need to revitalize the sector. Majority of the Pakistan's population rely on agriculture for their livelihood. Agricultural sector is indispensable to the country's economic growth particularly at the rural level. Pakistan, a major producer of cotton, is facing a significant decline in major varieties of cotton crop production due to multiple challenges. Climate change have dealt a severe blow to the crops, resulting in a substantial decline in agricultural yield. To ensure the prosperity of Pakistan's agricultural sector it is crucial to allocate resources towards reforms.