Q2

Multiple Identities and Unity in Pakistan

According to Anatol Lieven, The formidable unity of Pakistan can only be destroyed when its soldiers face powerful emotional pressure. This would happen when they have to decide between their country and religion. This will more likely happen when the US decide to invade Pakistan and its commanders failed to resist. Parts of the army will revolt, ~~and fight~~. This division in the army will lead to civil war rather than revolution. Furthermore, the author states that Pakistani society is engulfed with multiple identities that often prevent a united front. This is evident from their political decisions. Only a few, like some Islamists and soldiers, hold a single strong identity. To reinforce this argument the author quote a Lahori executive. According to him, it is unlikely Pakistanis would unite because of the diverse interpretations of Islam and various cultural differences present within the country.
