The "ascending potency of hybrid warfare being foisted on the state of Pakistan," refers to the increasing effectiveness and impact of hybrid warfare tactics that are being employed against Pakistan. Hybrid warfare involves a combination of conventional military tactics and non-traditional methods, such as information warfare, cyber attacks, economy pressure, and proxy support, to achieve strategic objectives. The term "ascending potency" implies that these tactics are becoming more powerful and influential over the time.

In Context of Pakistan, this means that various state and non-state actors are employing a range of tactics to undermine the country's security, stability, and interests. It can also impact public perception, erode trust in institutions and contribute to social and political unrest.

To counter the ascending potency of hybrid warfare, Pakistan would need to adopt a comprehensive strategy that includes enhancing cybersecurity measures, improving intelligence capability, strengthening diplomatic efforts to counter misinformation.
