Q#2 Precise

Anatol Lieven in his book "Pakistan A Hard Country," discusses that increased moral and emotional pressure can finish unity and discipline of Pakistan soldiers. This would occur when there is a conflict between being Pakistani Muslim and the commands against their conscience and honour. Author stated, if US invade part of Pakistan and commanders do not order for resistance, would lower army morale Army would become rebellion which ^{would} result in collapse of state. This situation would culminate to civil war not a national revolution like Iran. Revolution is not possible because of different identities on the basis of region and provinces. According to Ali Hassan, if he were a person to lead revolution would not be followed due to prevailing differences on the basis of provinces, cast, biradiri and personal conflicts. Islamic revolution would be failed because of influence of different kinds of Islam and saints. Resultantly Pakistani cannot be united for any revolution.
