Reflection of the outline :

This is clearly being manifested in the perpetuation of a culture of rote learning that prioritises memorization over critical learning. Another glaring effect is the outdated nature of the national curriculum, one that is premised on old pedagogical trends. Moreover, the failure to incorporate new trends is also one factor explaining the tendency of students to think only in binaries. This pattern of thinking is also a major hindrance to pluralism and diversity in campuses. Taking all these factors together, one can easily gauge the gravity of the situation, which can only be addressed through progressive measures. One such step could be the introduction of civic discourses. Another can be the mass adoption of problem-solving methodology through which teachers with licenses can foster an environment of open debates.
