Question #03

Answers :-

- ① No, the invention of weapon can not be attributed solely to Mikhail Kalashnikov. While he was the primary inventor, he had earlier designs that were unsuccessful, and there were likely other contributors and competitors involved in the development of the weapon.
- ② The weapon became a revolutionary rifle due to several factors. It was relatively inexpensive to produce, light-weight, and easy to use. It had minimal recoil and was highly reliable in various harsh conditions. These qualities made it popular and widely used around the world.
- ③ It means that Mikhail Kalashnikov's invention was born out of his first hand experience during the Second World War and the need for a better weapon to defend against German firearms. In times of crisis, there is often a heightened demand for innovative solutions to address pressing challenges.

The statement suggests that it is the people who carry guns, rather than the guns themselves, that cause harm and kill others. Mikhail Kalashnikov believed that the responsibility lies with the individuals who resort to violence, rather than solely blaming the weapon itself.

(5)

The last words of Mikhail Kalashnikov may provide some consolation to his conscience. He believed that he developed the weapon for defense purpose rather than offense, and he rebuffed attempts to make him feel guilty for the harm caused by his invention. However, whether his conscience was completely consoled is subjective and open to interpretation.

Question #07

He who takes a step forward progresses the most. It is not officers or systems that grant him advancement, but nature itself. We should have faith that Allah Almighty safeguards our efforts. We should believe that nature will also surely reward us. Those endeavors that are not rewarded by humans are definitely rewarded by Allah Almighty. You should have faith in this matter as firmly as you believe in the existence of your own body. Hazrat Sheikh Saadi says, 'Never ask for anything according to your own circumstances, but ask according to His worth.' It is possible that my circumstances are very humble, but may the Bestower make me a king according to His majesty. He has countless ways and means to bestow His blessings.
