Start the Introduction with an Attention Grabber?

Online learning is the most important medium of learning for its numerous benefits. It has contributed to growth in opportunities of earning. Easy access ~~from~~ to and from different parts of the world also makes it important. Moreover, online learning reduces the gaps in gendered communities by allowing learning available to them. Enhanced exposure with innovative ways of learning makes e-learning interesting. Reduction in cost of learning plays pivotal role in highlighting opportunities of tech-based learning. Besides, online education has made learning more reliable by involving use of diverse sources of information. Despite its opportunities, online education is not immune from challenges. Crisis of connectivity has made e-learning ineffective in areas which lack in it. of internet Vulnerability to external influences has also increased with the use of digital devices. Equally disturbing is the possibility of fraud and coercion by institutions of e-learning. Further, issues of poor quality and enhanced gaps inequality in society have also become visible in system of online education. These issues linked with e-learning can be managed effectively if certain steps are followed in this direction. Therefore, online education has surely guaranteed increased opportunities, but some issues have tendency to overshadow them.

If your stance is that it has provided opportunities more, then you need to maintain it in your evidence.
