Q.3 Question:-

1- Colonel Stauffenberg was the man who planted a bomb, on 20 July 1944, to kill Hitler in Prussian headquarters, the Wolf's Lair.

2- The film 'Valhalla' showed most plots which were true about Stauffenberg as in the beginning he was displayed with outstanding features and compared with the statue of knight. He had plan to defend the Berlin against insurgence and to show the world Germany as better.

3- It was not justified as it failed to convey the destructive ethical and political reality of Germans. It also did not depicted the actual mesmerizing personality of Stauffenberg and did not project light on the background of Stauffenberg.

There are contrasted as well as complementary sentiments evoked in the passage. As the Stauffenberg failed to kill Hitler and then got assassinated, of the view that he actually wanted to save his life refers to some contrasted views. Whereas, it is also of the view that he wanted to display a good better picture of Germany to the World as Hitler had believed Stauffenberg as epitome of German hero.

5. If Stauffenberg had survived the War, the circumstances were & might be different. As he was the only one who could access the Hitler and was able to kill him. He became aware of the reality that the chances of success were not to much.

the world. Intellectual persons choose such books according to their own will and circumstances, but where books change the world, there are few books which astray world and become responsible for its backwardness. With the publication of books in any society, it can be presumed that books which are published are world changer or fasten it in out dated rituals. From this point of view, if we overview the ^{books} publication in Pakistan, we see these books affect the minds of people with religious stereotypes, communal passion, and undue feelings of national pride. The projection of this mind set is seen in Pakistani society.

Q1

Precis

Gradual decrease in value of artwork.

Art became a mode of trade. The guardians of art scarcely acknowledged to share it with museum so, that it could be better displayed, and to increase worth of museums. People who could not appreciate art could easily indulge in its trading. The trading can be traced back in late nineties when Japanese shared more prices and great businessmen invested in world's great artwork. Ryoei

Saito brought one of the expensive art pieces, which later on disappeared. The owner of the museum made legal action by emphasizing that art can be only possessed by world. The only museum that possesses a great work is J. Paul Getty Museum. The art may lose its worth as it is in the hands of traders.
