ENGLISH COMPREHENSION TEST - 2

1. There is no difference between human beings' fears of death and children's fear of darkness because both the fears are a result of stories.

A religious and sacred view of death is when a person regards death as a kind of punishment for his sins and he thinks of death as his entry to another world.

Monks have described in their books that the painful experiences which they underwent by inflicting physical tortures upon themselves to purify themselves.

Seneca is of the view that circumstances of death frighten people more than death itself would do.

The uttering groans of a dying man, the body undergoing convulsions, the bloodless and pale face, and the various rituals performed, make all these facts make death appear more horrible than it would be otherwise.
