Q.2

Commercialization of Art

Art, in spite of having spiritual and deeper roots, became a business. People with wealth, museum supervisors, and entrepreneurs all contributed to art becoming a commercial undertaking. Further, a market was created by speculators and promoters in which cultural art was exchanged for profit. The Japanese 'bubble economy' further commodified art as tycoons and industrial giant, such as Ryoei Saito, invested heavily in great western art. Notwithstanding the ethical appeals that art belongs to the world at large, great art will continue to become a business. The world doesn't have the means to acquire art. Thus, art may be with private owners but its exchange would spread wealth amongst investors, collectors and artists. (100 words approx)

Ans 1

Stauffenberg was the man who tried to kill Hitler, on 20th July 1944, by placing a bomb next him in his headquarters, the Wolf's Lair.

Ans 2

The movie 'Valkyrie' was not very successful in presenting the true picture of Stauffenberg and his struggle. It did not present Stauffenberg's personality in a correct manner. It also does not ^{present} refer to his background and philosophy in a fitting manner.

Ans 3 The plot by Stauffenberg to kill Hitler was justified in the opinion of the writer. The writer believes that Stauffenberg felt the need to show that there was a better Germany, instead of the Germany shown to the world, and that he was the representative of that history.

Ans 4 The contrasted and complementary sentiments evoked in the passage are that while Stauffenberg was well-respected in his circle, orders were given to shoot him because of his conspiracy against Hitler (a contrasted sentiment). The complementary sentiment evoked the acknowledgement by even Hitler that Stauffenberg was a typical example of a German hero and the only one who could kill him.

Ans 5 If Stauffenberg had survived the war, he would have been honored by the Germans. He might even have been made the chief of staff.

One day, walking up a hill, I said to Friday, "Do you not wish to be in your own country again?" "Yes," he said, "I miss it." "What would you do there, if you ever go back?" said I, "would you turn wild and eat men's flesh again?" He looked full of concern and while shaking his head said, "No." I was glad to hear this, as we gradually kept climbing towards the top.

Just as we came in sight of the valley, Jamil met us and said that yes the valley is all very fine but do you know that there is nothing to eat. Someone said that it's nonsense; we can eat anything in here. Jamil replied that well, the brown bread's two months old, and there's nothing else but potatoes. Someone replied that there must be milk anyhow. Jamil supposed that yes, there was milk.

Q: 7

It is often said about certain books that they have changed the world, accomplished people choose these books according to their wishes and circumstances, however, where books have changed the world, there are some books which have misguided the world and are responsible for its degeneration. In any society, from the contents of a book it can be judged whether these books would change the world or would keep the world entrapped in pointless traditions. If we analyze the books in Pakistan from this point of view, we see that these books affect people's mind through their religious, ethnic and nationalistic sentiments. This mentality is quite visible in contemporary Pakistani society.
