We keep on examining people all our lives. We are in search of friends but encounter enemies at every step. Friends are to be found but enemies are readily available. The same question is coming to mind again that who really is the enemy. There are hundreds of thousands of people in every person's life. Life is to be spent with all of them. We can not live alone. Family, relatives, neighbours, townspeople, acquaintances, companions and many other people keep on becoming a part of our life. It is a matter of whole life. Many people are difficult to understand, but even then we can not live alienated from them. Sometimes, a relationship has to be maintained out of compulsion or interest.
