We keep observing people for lifetime. We are in quest of friends, but at every step we encounter foes. Friends are to be searched. Enemies are readymade available. Then the same question arises ^{in the mind} to the surface of brain that who exactly is an enemy. Everyone has twenties or hundreds of people in his life. Life has to be spent with those people. We cannot live lonely. Family members, relatives, neighbors, fellow residents, infrequent visitors, friends and many other people remain a part of our life. It is a lifetime process. We cannot understand many people yet we cannot keep them at bay. Sometimes, the relation is to be maintained solely out of mere compulsion or expediency.
