We judge people in our whole life. We always remain in search of friends but get enemies at every step. Friends have to be searched. Enemies are ~~also~~ available easily. Then the same question ~~has~~ ~~been~~ ~~arising~~ ~~in~~ ~~mind~~ ~~being~~ ~~arisen~~ in the mind that who the enemy really is. There are billions of millions of people in every human's life and we have to spend our life with them.

We cannot live alone. Our family, relatives, neighbours, nearpeers, friends and many others people remain a part of our life. It is a matter of whole life. We do not understand many people are beyond our understanding but we cannot break up with them. Sometimes, the

We tend to test people throughout our lives. Our quest for companionship persists, yet adversaries continue to cross our paths. The pursuit of friendship becomes imperative, while foes seem to be readily available. Thus, the same query arises in our minds: who, after all, is the ultimate adversary? In the life of every individual, there exist dozens or hundreds of people. Coexisting with all of them becomes incumbent. We cannot live alone. Family members, relatives, neighbours, acquaintances, colleagues, confidants, and various others continue to become part of our lives. It is an enduring affair. Numerous individuals are incomprehensible, yet we cannot escape them. At times, upholding relationships becomes an inevitable obligation dictated either by circumstances or expediency.
