We judge people throughout life. We are always looking for friends but step by step, the rivals keep encountering. Friend here to be found. Rivals are readily available. Then the same question ^{arises} in mind that who is the friend at least. There are twenty scores or hundreds of people in every human's life. We cannot live alone. Family, relatives, neighbours, locals, co-workers, friends and many others are a part of life. It is a long life affair. We cannot understand many people but still we cannot avoid them. Sometime relationship has to be maintained only under compulsion or expediency.

Solution:

We tend to test people throughout our lives. Our quest for companionship persists, yet adversaries/ enemy continue to cross our paths. The pursuit of friendship becomes imperative, while foes seem to be readily available. Thus, the same query arises in our minds: who, indeed, is the ultimate adversary? In the life of every individual, there exist scores or hundreds of people. To coexist with all of them becomes incumbent. We cannot live alone. Family members, relatives, neighbors, acquaintances, colleagues, confidants, and various others continue to become part of our lives. It is an enduring affair, where numerous individuals are unable to comprehend it, yet we cannot ignore it. At times, upholding relationships becomes an inevitable obligation dictated either by circumstances or personal gain.
