Education and its impact on youth.

Presently, there exist ~~three~~ three main school of thought pertaining to the freedom of education. They differ on the basis of end goals and psychological theory. They argue to whether the children should ~~be~~ stay completely free or under dictation regardless of how good or bad they might be. One of them argues that the child should be free good, despite the freedom given to them. The last belief, although it defies human nature but is still prevalent. ~~This~~ Children and Adults alike, need constraints to stop them from committing bad. The writer disagrees with those who associate education with only the spontaneous development of child. Such a group, according to the writer, downplays the significance of knowledge. The decisions one makes would be impractical, if are solely based on sudden impulse, by passing any rationale. The world has grown so much thanks to science and technique, therefore education should entail these. Success of man ~~or~~ intelligence, self-restraint and kindness is what contributed towards mens' success, however, it would be hard to keep achieving success if all they used was simultaneous impulse. Education is not <sup>only</sup> limited to an opportunity towards growth but ~~is~~ also provides mental and moral equipment.

Q3) 1) Happiness is extremely important to people, for most it is the driving force that pushes them to Q3) 2) Happiness is extremely important to most people. Most people go through the struggles and hard work in their pursuit of happiness. However, there is a prevailing ~~misop~~ misconception that correlates more material wealth with more happiness. However, according to the writer, this belief is contradicted in 2012 Happy Planet Index (HPI) <sup>findings</sup> that indicated North American & European ~~states~~ not the happiest ~~people~~ people, despite ~~their~~ all their wealth.

2) The "Voluntary Simplicity" aimed at spreading awareness of the environmental repercussion that came along with consumerism. The movement denoted a free choice made by people themselves to make certain changes that would enrich their lives by eliminating habit, prevailing trends that distracts one from their inner selves. In this movement one needs to distinguish their basic requirements from their psychological desires, and creating a healthy balance. The philosophy was that in a world where companies brand their products with success, one must be clear on the things that are essential and try resisting ~~the~~ what is not necessary.

3) The growing consumerism of modern society has a negative impact ~~of~~ on the lives of many. In countries where people strive to get more, living a life of simplicity is perceived with poverty or ~~in~~ social inferiority. This ~~mean~~ ~~despite~~ ~~one's own~~ means many have to spend on products that have no use to them, however to maintain a so decent social standing they are left with no choice.

4) There are certain factors that can ~~influence~~ ~~the~~ make it difficult for people to reduce consumption patterns. Living in societies where companies associate their products with success is one of the factors. These advertisements try to justify their products by highlighting their need in one's life; they also imply that without their products one is deemed as less desirable. Another factor is that living a simple life ~~with~~ ~~is~~ ~~perceived~~ ~~as~~ <sup>with</sup> poverty, ~~damaging~~ ~~one's~~ social standing. People often don't have the need for certain items ~~or~~ but in order to maintain their social status have to buy them anyway. Another factor to consider is the abundant resources present today. Many do not recognise the importance of saving energy or other resources because they have an indefinite supply of these. So saving these resources for the future generation does not concern them.

5) The challenges includes fighting one's own nature and resisting the urge to buy unnecessary things. It is often very hard to distinguish between requirements and desires. ~~When you~~ Moreover, damaging your social status can be associated by living a simple life. In today's society people are judged on the basis of ~~the~~ wealth and materialistic belongings they own. If you don't show your wealth you are perceived as inferior or poor. However, practicing Voluntary simplicity means having a conscious that less is more. Consequently, people stop striving for their materialistic things and actually spend more time with their loved ones or doing things they enjoy, this is where the true happiness lies.
