Title :- Purpose over monetary desires

A sagacious and knowledgeable man values money the same way healthy people merit a good meal. He never makes money the epicenter of his life as his commitment to work is greater than all monetary desires. The true calling of a soldier is fighting battles and that of a cleric is to preach regardless of any financial gains. Similarly doctors care less about their dues and more about saving lives. Therefore, although the audacious professionals cherish money, it is their life purpose that comes first.
