Q-2 Precise

There are three schools of thought about the education of children. One says that they should be completely free, one imposes complete authority and the third suggests free but they should do only good.

The last one is like Rousseauism which states liberty leads to immorality.

They say there should be an environment of education they will grow by themselves. But knowledge separates humans from animals, and it should be given.

In a free environment self-control is difficult with unchecked. Education is necessary for the mental and moral growth of the children.
