(Part-02)

Author characterized the concept of "Voluntary Simplicity" in two <sup>approaches</sup> ~~ways~~ that are, as a movement and as a philosophy. As a movement, the concept included meetings, gatherings, and inter-networking to spread awareness of needs of simplicity and impact of consumerism. Whereas as a philosophy, it referred to the balance between desires and requirements of life. However, both <sup>approaches</sup> ~~ways~~ stressed over 10 simplicity.

(Part-03)

The most feared impact of increased consumerism is getting short of resources. As more and more resources are being consumed, the planet is getting <sup>short</sup> out of them and in future there will be no resources left to be consume. Therefore, consumerism must decrease.

(Question: 02)

Title: Importance of Education in Character Development

There are three school of thoughts about freedom of children in education. First, it should be completely left to them that if they want to get education or not.

Second, they should strictly be forced to get education. Third, they should be given choice Have choice in exchange of promise of good character. Most of the people consider the third one, the best one.

However, author criticizes as it undermines the importance of education, while education is <sup>not only</sup> the core element for social and moral development of the child but it is also necessary for child's mental development. Also, Education and good character are interlinked and children cannot achieve one by ignoring other.

Therefore, Science and technology atleast, should be mandatory for them to study.

The need of education can be calculated from life of men, who lack good habits mostly, because they are given Do not pass Ur comments plz the ~~blame~~ at education.

~~Here,~~ it can be concluded that education is ~~an~~ indispensable element in positive mental and moral development of children, which calls of the third school of thought.
