Title: work is more important than money

A well-educated, intellectual, or brave man cannot physically make money the main object of his thoughts. All healthy minded people ought to like the sensation of winning money more than money itself. For example, a good soldier likes to win the battles; a clergyman's aim is to baptize and preach; a doctor's aim is to cure the sick. However, all these people still like to get paid. Every brave and rightly trained man consider his work as first and their fee as second which is also important.
