Duty triumphs over wages

A person likes making money, as it proves to be a thrill and is associated with winning. Nonetheless, monetary value is not the primary focus. For example, a good soldier's main objective is to fight well and win battles, not the pay associated with it. The same is true for a clergyman as well. Similarly, a good doctor will prioritize curing his patients over money. Thus, men will always consider their work to be more important than their fees.
