A great man always considers money just a source of livelihood. The healthy people like to eat but they do not live for it; and the mature people prefer to enjoy the impactful process of making money. An officer fights to win the battle rather than for the salary. And the clergyman's goal is to guide the people in religious matters, not money. Similarly, good natured doctors always prefer to cure their patients timely regardless their income. However, money has always been a secondary option for the passionate people.
