

Work First, Money Second

It is impossible for a well-educated person to make money the principal aim of his living. All positive minded people like dinner, but it is not the chief object of their life. Similarly, they do appreciate monetary gains but are more fond of their earning process. For example dedicated workers such as soldiers, doctors, clergy etc. focus more on their duties than salaries. Hence, for all righteous people, money is important but secondary to work.