Question 2:

To be a commander courage is essential and being calm negates any kind of strategic blunder. Additionally, health is important, but a strong spirit can rule in a weak body. Now the question arises about age. In the past various generals have achieved glory when they were above the age of 60. However, while comparing to the past one should keep in mind that growth was slower back then. It is impossible to compare wisdom of old age with bravery of young. Indeed, a mature mind can give better judgement. Nonetheless, it cannot be denied a good old general will lose against a good & young general. Thus, never judge for general a good decision.
