Q2 Precise :-

"Types of groups through the lens of a sociologist"

Groups are common in a society and play an important role in nurturing shared values. The three types of groups i.e. functionalist, conflict and interactionist can be understood by looking at the Occupy wall street movement through their lens. The functionalist view the different aspects of the society and it studies the roles of different parts of the society. In case of the occupy movement the functionalist might ask how the movement helps in paying attention to the economy or how the locals are effected by the influx of protestors. The conflict perspective focuses on inequality. Studying the occupy movement they might look at the manipulation of businesses leading to inequality or the shift of wealth from the middle class to the upper class reminding of the Marxist two class system. Interactionist is the third perspective which looks at the day

Q7 Ans - Humans had done two achievements in their three lacs years of history which differentiates them from other animals. One of them is the invention of language and the other is formation of law and order. Law is such an invention of humans that prevails harmony in the society and through which humans are accountable for their actions. You would be sitting in your home drinking some tea, some form of law would be applicable to you. Judicially you would be liable to pay the gas bill by which you have cooked your tea at all times. Going out of our homes we are subject to laws unintentionally and it is actually the law that give us the feeling of security but we donot acknowledge it.
