

Q. No. 2

Evil of Beggary in India

Begging has become the most widespread thing in India. There is no statistics available for estimating their continuous rise in number. Their increase has led to call the different cities as cities of beggars. Their increase is evident to any visitor of foreign country.

Poverty, unemployment and increase in population are the major reasons of begging. But it also has the social roots, where the people find special glory of Punya in giving charity, even to those abled-bodied beggars in pants, boots and ties, exploiting the patterns where charity is actually needed.

The major concern is to know about how these beggars live and how their presence impact the society. Indians being generous and hospitable towards beggars consider that charity to beggars ensures Moksha in next world. This faith has been the main cause of their increase. People are eagerly ready to go to heavens by offering donations to the beggars and their number is thriving. They wander from street to street just for begging. The state is in a dire need to implement strict laws like West that warned people to work if want to eat. To improvise the laws is necessary to root out evil of beggary.

Q. No. 7 Translation.

A student's life duty is to learn from teachers and books, ~~to~~ to illuminate the dark paths of life. This duty requires uniformity and consistency, by separating strictly every external factor which opposes it. Otherwise the student's training will remain incomplete, as the time that should have been spent in acquiring knowledge, would be wasted in political activities.

Our country needs those scholars rather than political workers, who have the eastern knowledge, western knowledge, religious knowledge, and worldly knowledge.

It is obvious that such universal people are only then can be born, when political factors should not interfere in academics.

It is said that, our educational standard is low to that of Western countries. This is true to some extent that this is result of our economic conditions and may be due to the fact that our teachers are unable to ignite the spark of knowledge in the heads of students. But most of the responsibility should definitely vested to students themselves.
