PRECIS

Begging has become an expanding profession in India. Foreigners are often found to complain about Indian cities as cities of beggars. This enormous increase is due to some prominent causes. First, the religiosity of Indians persuaded them to give something on call of a beggar. Saints and Pandits are repeatedly ask for generosity towards the poor in order to gain favors in hereafter. Secondly, there are notable number of healthy beggars who opted beggary, not as their compulsion but as inheritance. Wearing a flamboyant multi-color dress, they regularly wander home to home for collection. Thirdly, fear of curse by beggars wheedles people to aid them. Evidently, along with poverty, unemployment and over-population, the dearth of social consciousness regarding beggary is a root of cause of it. In India, beggars are everywhere, and even some of them are richer than their givers. The situation seems more dimmed when compare with the western societies where begging is prohibited. Fortunately, sincere efforts, in this
