The number of professional beggars in India is increasing consistently, particularly in busy tourist cities. These cast a bad impression of the country on foreigner visitors. For the eradication of beggary culture its causes and conditions of survival must be known without their number.

The first cause of a high number of beggars is related with religion. People have faith that God given money will protect them in hereafter and it is an easy way to heaven. Such beliefs have made beggars spoiled and hereditary beggars. Physically fit persons go to door to door for begging. Other causes of begging are ignorance of common masses. Fear of cursing forces them to give money, but in fact these beggars are richer than poor patrons. Third reason is poverty. For the eradication of beggary culture from society

The Government has to make law against beggars, and then must implicate them in every part of the country. Other thing that must be done is work on the mind-set of common people, by educating them that charity to a poor person is not a source of salvation. These step when taken seriously will end beggars from society one day.
