Question no. 2

Threat to Democracy

Misinformation and disinformation pose a threat to democratic integrity and general electoral processes. The spread of false information can have a negative effect on voters via methods that include conventional propaganda, defamation of candidates, and AI-generated deep fakes. Moreover, electoral processes may also be influenced instilling fear in the hearts of voters through false threats. Fortunately, strategies can be adopted to prevent this. These strategies include general educational interventions and specific evidence-based campaigns. But the implementation of these strategies requires identification of seriousness of problem, necessity to correct it, and a general value for democratic rights and principles.
