Precis TitleMisinformation: a threat to democratic process

Thousands of people will cast their votes this year. However, this democratic process is threatened by misinformation. There is a concern that malign actors may either influence voters' choices or undermine election directly. The voters' choices can be protected by education and campaign interventions. These measures can only be used after the consensus among scholars on three major issues including, gravity of the problem, distinction between true or false information and upholding democratic principle - liberty.
