Misinformation: A Threat to Democracy

Many people have the right of vote in a number of major elections this year. However, there is a great threat to democracy due to misleading information. Democracy requires transparency and awareness. Concern about election related misinformation is justified as it has capacity of polarization. Particularly, voters can be ~~harmfully~~ influenced harmfully through conventional and modern methods. Anti-democratic agents can attack directly too. There are several ways to protect the voters against misinformation. However, implementation can also be possible if requires recognition of the seriousness of the problem, acceptance of classification of information as misinformation, and assurance of upholding of democratic principles.
