Part - II

Question # 2

*Misinformation is a threat to democracy

In this year, billions of people are set to participate in elections. While democracy leans on fact-based communication and well-informed public, its integrity is at risk from misinformation. Misinformation and false claims exert bad influence on voters. The electoral processes are in direct danger of being spoiled by the anti-democratic agents, just as it was obvious from last year elections in Spain. There certainly are several approaches to protect the voters against misinformation but these they require settlement of issues, like acknowledging the severity of problem, appropriate classification of information and ensuring that the interventions are not against freedom of expression.
