QUESTION 2

ANSWER

Misinformation: A Threat to Democracy

Around half of world's population were eligible to vote in elections this year. Meanwhile, election related misinformation has magnified polarization and eroded public trust in democratic promise of fair information. False propagandas and fabricated video contents have affected voter's decision. Furthermore, intervention of undemocratic forces in electoral process has maliciously spread false information as seen in Spain's elections. However by adopting three measures marked by acknowledging, labelling and countering of misinformation as necessary tasks can affirm democratic integrity.
