Misinformation: A Threat to Democracy

Answer

Misinformation and Democracy

06/20

Currently, four billion people contribute to electoral process. Unfortunately, ~~biased~~ <sup>misinformation</sup> ~~media~~ poses risk to democracy. True democracy revolves around fact-based information among people. Contrarily, <sup>false</sup> ~~biased~~ information raises questions on electoral transparency. Rising propaganda manipulates public mindsets by rivals of democracy. However, various methodologies protect democracy from misinformation, including education and awareness campaign. Thereby, collaboration between scholars and public on three agendas: problem identification, propaganda acceptance, and intervention against misinformation can ensure these efforts respect democratic principles and freedom of expression.
