This year, In spite of judicial turnout of votes in various elections there has been persistent threat of misinformation to democratic norms. Such misinformation, have to potential to maximize the polarization. The usage of conventional and unconventional means of misinformation have strongly impacted the voters. Anti-democratic forces also hamper the process of fair elections. As in case of Spanish elections, the hechels falsly posed threat of terrorist attacks during election day. Certain measures including education, and cutting of misinformation through evidence can be employed but these depend on principles of recognizing, accepting problems and prevention to
