

Title: Corruption: Root cause of all evils

Most people often do corruption without knowing the repercussions of this crime. Initially, it seems a small act afterwards, it becomes a normal act. This results into mistrust in government official.

Molding the rules for small favors end up in large scale corruption, halting progress and development. Moreover, public resources are divided unjustly. When the merit is overlooked the system becomes inefficient. Further, it weakens the societal norms by leveraging ineligible people; creating feeling of resentment in people striving hard by following the rules. Frequent small-scale corruption eventually results in larger crimes. Integrity is reflected through transparency in even smaller action. These actions define the society. Therefore, holding on one's values a fair and equitable environment can be created.
